

A New Beginning Awaits! Revitalize your Approach to Infant-Family Mental Health Practice

We invite WAIMH members, their students and their associates to join a growing number of professionals worldwide who are transforming their practice to infuse a coparenting and family systems framework. As the USF Family Study Center celebrates its 20th anniversary, please join us for our 2024 Infant-Family Mental Health Graduate Certificate program.

Directed by Dr. James McHale and featuring internationally-recognized leaders in coparenting and family theory and practice, USF’s year-long, fully-online program delivers one of the world’s only graduate certificates focused expansively on Infant-Family Mental Health. Designed for practicing professionals holding a bachelor’s, Master’s or higher degree in psychology, education, social work or other health- and human-service-related fields, this program covers a broad range of subjects relating to theory, conceptual thinking, and applied issues in clinical work with infants, toddlers and their decidedly unique family systems. Core coverage includes:

- Coparenting
- Cultural Diversity and Humility
- Triadic and Family-Focused Assessment
- Triadic and Family-Focused Intervention
- Risk and Resiliency
- Reflective Practice
- Systems and Community Change

PROGRAM REQUIREMENTS (THIS PROGRAM IS FULLY ONLINE)

The year-long Infant-Family Mental Health Graduate Certificate runs from January through December. It is 12 credit hours and includes the following four courses:

- Infant-Family Mental Health
- Assessment of Infant-Family Mental Health
- Working with Families of Infants and Toddlers
- Coparenting and System Change for Infant-Family Mental Health
